Koenig Lane Christian Church is proud of their new sign which was made by the Austin Area Homeschooler's Friday Co-op students, who meet weekly at the church during the Spring and Fall semesters.

The AAH Friday Co-op is an inclusive once-a-week cooperative made up of families with a common goal: to provide their children with a socially and academically enriching education in a diverse, supportive, and respectful environment. The co-op offers a variety of classes for the students, from science, history and culture, and arts and crafts, all the way to cooking and fun and games ... whatever the students want to learn and the parents want to teach. The co-op operates as a true cooperative; each parent participates through teaching, assisting, and handling administrative tasks.

Friday Co-op is open to families who homeschool who have at least one child age 5 or older through age 18. There are three class periods, with a selection of classes offered each period for most age ranges, plus an hour for lunch. Although the families have diverse religious beliefs and practices, Friday Co-op is a secular group.

KLCC wants to thank the Friday Co-op students and parents for their generosity of time and talent in creating our beautiful new sign and for their spirit of giving back to our church and the community.
